Miles de norcoreanos dieron la bienvenida a Putin en su visita a Corea del Norte

El presidente ruso, Vladimir Putin, recibió una calurosa bienvenida de miles de norcoreanos mientras visitaba Pyongyang, la capital de Corea del Norte, por primera vez en 24 años. Los ciudadanos, que ondeaban banderas rusas y norcoreanas, así como ramos de flores, se alinearon a lo largo de las avenidas principales de la ciudad para dar la bienvenida al líder ruso.

Putin fue recibido con una ceremonia de bienvenida en la plaza Kim Il Sung, en el corazón de Pyongyang, donde soldados a caballo, personal militar y niños con globos vitorearon al ritmo de la música y ante los retratos de los dos líderes.

Putin y su homólogo norcoreano, Kim Jong Un, presentaron a sus delegaciones y estuvieron de pie mientras sonaba el himno nacional ruso. Después, los dos líderes se subieron a un descapotable y saludaron a la multitud mientras sonreían y saludaban.

Putin llegó a Corea del Norte en las primeras horas de la mañana del miércoles local para una visita poco frecuente, lo que refleja el acercamiento de Moscú a Pyongyang frente a la hostilidad compartida hacia el Oeste y las preocupaciones internacionales sobre su creciente cooperación militar.

Varios gobiernos han acusado a Pyongyang de suministrar armas a Moscú para su guerra en Ucrania, una acusación que tanto Corea del Norte como Rusia han negado, a pesar de las pruebas sustanciales de tales transferencias.

Se espera que los dos autócratas firmen un nuevo acuerdo de asociación estratégica como señal de su expansión de relaciones.

La visita también supone un gran impulso para Kim, quien sigue aislado en el escenario mundial debido a su programa de armas ilegales y no ha recibido a otro líder mundial en su capital desde el inicio de la pandemia.

Una relación en crecimiento

La creciente relación entre Rusia y Corea del Norte ha generado preocupación en Seúl y Washington, no solo por las transferencias de armas norcoreanas a Rusia, sino también por la posibilidad de que Moscú transfiera su tecnología militar superior para apoyar el programa de armas pesadamente sancionado de Pyongyang.

La tensión sigue siendo alta en la Península de Corea, ya que Kim ha intensificado el lenguaje belicoso y ha abandonado recientemente una política de larga data de buscar una reunificación pacífica con Corea del Sur.
